Hello there!

My name is Liz Wolner and I am very interested in your position: User Experience Designer (UX Designer). I am an exceedingly curious and eager Product Engineer looking to translate my skills into a career as a UX Designer.

I am a great candidate for this position because I currently work with cross-functional teams every day driving sales for the exclusive Target brands. I have experience with working with people in many areas including, but not limited to: product management, engineers, designers, quality assurance, customer insights, merchants, sourcing managers. I have strong communication skills and approach relationships with empathy and a genuine desire to listen and understand.

I am very passionate about customer satisfaction. My experience designing physical products for Target has taught me a lot about how to prioritize and manage multiple products at once. My current design process is as follows: meet with designers & merchants to understand the desired upcoming assortment, create product direction for the vendors to initiate the sampling process, communicate with overseas vendors daily to iterate on the product, meet with cross-functional partners to discuss the affordability of the product and make changes to improve the items, approve the products for mass-production, follow up on the product's success by keeping a close eye on Customer Reviews and answering questions directly from the guest on Target.com.

I take initiative when digging into a problem, and have deep passion for understanding the user. I strongly believe in continuous improvement and am always looking for ways to learn from the past to propel the business into the future. I am known for my determination and perseverance in the face of a challenge, and hope I get the chance to show you first-hand.

Thank you for your consideration!

Sincerely,
Liz Wolner
